++ Valid for broadcast between 0600 and 1800

Headline:
Becoming less cold for many areas next few days.

Today:
Freezing fog and low cloud may be slow to clear from southern areas, elsewhere variable cloud and some sunshine in central and southern areas. Cloudier further north with some rain, mainly in the north-west, with snow showers for Shetland.

Tonight:
Some frost and fog in south, but less than recent nights, elsewhere rather cloudy with scattered showers in west and more persistent rain in the north-west. Frost in far north.

Monday:
Rain, some heavy, moving south, turning to snow across some northern and later central parts of Scotland. Wintry showers in the far north. Milder in south.

Outlook for Tuesday to Thursday:
Dry for many on Tuesday before rain spreads across all parts Wednesday, perhaps briefly some snow on northern hills. Becoming mainly dry on Thursday. Milder.
